Domestic Government : Kinship, Community and Policy in North Yemen (Society and Culture in the Modern Middle East) Martha Mundy

This work explores the notion of ""household"" as the site and organizing model not only of production but also of politics in Yemen's past and present. Based on extensive fieldwork, the study is written from the vantage point of women's society but, insisting that domestic government is not the same as women's private domain, it is not confined to a study of women. The author instead links the idea and organization of the household with property and suggests subtle ways in which household and house relate to locality, region and wider notions of government and legal authority.
