Imani Jones was one of those women that you thought died with the Gone with the Wind era. A Southern Belle in modern times, she believed a man was meant to be nurtured into his true self. These deeply embedded beliefs made her a sucker for potential. More often than not, she found herself laboring over clay that refused to be molded. Adding more water, less fire, less water, more fire. Watching her men shape shift into everything but what she'd intended—everyone but who she'd envisioned them to be.

She often made the common mistake many women made of taking some dirt, adding blood, sweat and tears to turn it to clay, molding it, fashioning it, polishing it up and putting it in the window for display. In most cases, these men forgot they came from dirt and convinced themselves the molding and polishing was all their doing. Then, they went out and found a more refined piece of pottery to match the beauty she had bestowed in them. It was a Catch-22 and she had come to the conclusion that she was meant to be alone.

A woman of affairs.

Affairs that left a new man's scent lingering on her skin each night. Reckless habits that turned into a lifestyle that would eventually consume her, until Vincent Garvey entered the picture. A tall, dark and sexy man who demanded her attention almost immediately. He shows her another side of love. The tender, loving and caring side she thought she would never embrace again.

Will Imani get past her love, lust and trust issues and receive the love Vincent has for her? Or will Vincent prove to be just another man who is playing games with her heart?
