' We can judge of the features of the Watauga constitution only by such evidence as can be gleaned from the institutions established under it. Fortunately the Cumberland Compact has been preserved almost I entire. It was found in 1846 by the historian Putnam, the first page having been destroyed. It was in fair condition and legible. Garrett and Goodpasture's opinion is that "it compares favorably with any constitution ever written" in point of literary merit; which, as the signers were almost all native.born Americans and nearly all signed their names, somewhat weakens the charge so often made of southern illiteracy in early times. The Compact establishes a tribunal of twelve members, with certain judicial, legislative and executive functions. These functions are limited and defined. It distributes this court equitably between the eight settlements in the Cumberland country; that is to say, Nashborough, Mansker's, Bledsoe's, Asher's,...
