Excerpt from Tradesmen's Tokens, Current in London and Its Vicinity Between the Years 1648 and 1672: Described From the Originals in the British Museum, and in Several Private Collections

Notwithstanding the dictum of Pinkerton, many persons are yet found who collect Tradesmen's Tokens; and even in Germany, where not a tittle of Numismatic evidence is slighted or despised, these media of "charite and change" are not considered unworthy the attention of those who can appreciate a better and a more legitimate coinage.

When we committed to the hands of our printer, some time since, a list of Tokens issued by Wiltshire Tradesmen in the 17th century, we had some misgivings as to its reception by our French friends. Our uneasiness on this head has however diminished; and a paper in the Revue Numismatique on the Brummagem satirical medalets, struck in this country, in ridicule of Tom Paine and the Jacobins of his day, assures us that even such trifles as these are occasionally not unworthy the notice of the learned and practised numismatist.
